SWIFT (Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication)	February 15, 2019	SWIFT publishes cybersecurity counterparty risk guide This document provides general and non-binding guidance for SWIFT users on how to use and interpret cybersecurity data from counterparties within the financial services ecosystem. The guidance will assist customers in incorporating counterparties' cybersecurity attestations against SWIFT's Customer Security Control Framework (CSCF). The CSCF establishes a security baseline of mandatory and advisory controls for the entire user community, against which SWIFT users are required to self-attest their compliance on an annual basis. The controls are reviewed every twelve months, and customers had until December 31, 2018 to attest their compliance against the applicable controls — a deadline which 94 per cent of customers met. OSFI [Banks, Bank Holding Companies, Federally Regulated Trust and Loan Companies, Cooperative Retail Associations]	February 8, 2019	Proposed changes to the Liquidity Adequacy Requirements Guideline OSFI is issuing proposed revisions to the Liquidity Adequacy Requirements (LAR) Guideline. Since the financial crisis of 2008, liquidity risk management has continued to be a key area of focus for deposit-taking institutions (DTIs) and supervisors. Importantly, DTIs are expected to have a liquidity risk management framework that, amongst other things, ensures they maintain sufficient liquidity to withstand a stressed environment. The LAR Guideline defines and assigns run-off rates to various categories of funding, according to the degree to which those sources of funding would be at risk under stress conditions. Since the Liquidity Coverage Ratio and Net Cumulative Cash Flow were first issued in 2014, DTIs' funding models and deposits product offerings	Comments were due by March 15, 2019.

		have continued to evolve. Given these developments OSFI has reassessed the assumptions built into its regulatory liquidity metrics, particularly those relating to the stability of funding sources, to ensure that the metrics remain appropriate in maintaining a resilient banking sector. OSFI is targeting January 1, 2020 for implementation of the proposed revisions to the LAR.

		FINTRAC undertook a comprehensive review of its AMPs program to address decisions of the federal courts in 2016. The Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada made a number of revisions to its administrative monetary penalties program, including: • Ensuring that it considers the unique factors in each case to determine the penalty amount, based on the harm caused by the violations committed; • Ensuring that the factors that lead to the penalty calculation are clearly outlined; and • Publishing its enhanced administrative monetary penalties policy for greater transparency. By providing comprehensive information on the enhancements to its AMPs policy and penalty calculation methodology, FINTRAC wants to ensure that reporting entities will have a better understanding of its program and approach.
