BLG announces partnership with Workday

Canada’s largest law firm selects leading HR enterprise cloud application

Toronto (February 6, 2020) — Borden Ladner Gervais LLP (BLG) is proud to announce its partnership with Workday, a global leader in enterprise cloud applications for finance and human resources. As the first Canadian law firm to utilize the Workday platform, this partnership will enable BLG to bring the best-in-class technology to deliver an exceptional employee experience and more efficiently manage talent and processes nationwide.

Workday’s suite of data and analytic tools will allow BLG to quickly track workforce insights for more informed decisions, while streamlining HR and talent management operations. It will also eliminate time-consuming manual tasks and allow our talent team to focus on value-added services.

"Our business is people, and we are thrilled to implement Workday’s Human Capital Management service to provide more flexibility in our processes and better manage our exceptional talent,” says Leanne Cherry, BLG’s Chief Talent Officer. “We are excited to explore the possibilities for talent development, performance management, goal-setting and tracking, analytics and experience tracking, which positions BLG extremely well for the future.”

“Workday is best-in-class, agile and mobile-friendly, which aligns with BLG’s bold innovation and digital strategy,” says Rob Morris, Chief Operating & Information Officer at BLG. “As we strive to be the most technologically advanced law firm in Canada, we are excited to use Workday’s cloud-based technology to automate our processes and enable our leadership team to make better, more strategic decisions.”

BLG will begin using Workday in the Fall 2020.
