Meghan is an articling student at BLG's Montreal office and is interested in commercial litigation and class actions.

She assists with legal research, drafting pleadings and document review. She also occasionally attends court to assist with proceedings.

Before attending law school, Meghan earned a bachelor's degree in psychology and behavioral science from McGill University, graduating with recognition on the Dean's Honour List. As a law student, she was co-founder and president of her faculty's Real Estate Committee. Meghan also spent part of her studies at the University of Milan, where she focused on EU business law and food regulation.
