eDiscovery

Lauren is an experienced eDiscovery lawyer with more than 15 years working at the intersection of law and technology. She is committed to improving the efficiency of legal practice by employing innovative tools and strategies. Lauren has extensive eDiscovery experience, with a particular emphasis on leveraging emerging technologies, such as artificial intelligence, to achieve innovative, cost-effective and defensible eDiscovery solutions for clients.

Lauren has hands-on experience overseeing the entire eDiscovery process – from identification, preservation, and collection to analyzing large volumes of information using advanced legal technology, overseeing and advising on complex electronic document reviews, and managing and providing advice on productions.

Lauren also provides advice to organizations on information management and technology strategies. She advises clients on best practices for managing electronic information, and helps clients develop information governance programs that strengthen document management and retention practices, reduce risk, support compliance and streamline future discovery processes.
