Jérôme focuses his practice on construction law and surety law. He is known for his rigorous approach and his ability to simplify the most complex technical and legal issues.

Before studying law, he completed a bachelor’s degree in mechanical engineering, which lead him to work alongside prominent contractors on-site and help see several projects to fruition.

Jérôme mainly represents general contractors, insurers and engineers in matters involving claims for additional work and impact costs, calls for tenders, and professional liability.

He collaborates to the preparation of litigation files intended for all levels of court in Québec.
